Character Building Classes

Our Character Building Classes this month will include the topic of being Courageous/Brave

Kids are growing up in a world that is becoming increasingly competitive and comparative. It is easy for any of us to believe that the ones who have found success or happiness are better than, stronger than, smarter than, or privy to something magical, strengths or qualities that are reserved for the lucky few. The truth is that none of us are born with the 'success' gene or the 'happiness gene'. There are many things that lead to success and happiness, but one of the most powerful of these is courage.

Behind so many brilliant successes are failures, rejections, and unexpected turns. Often without exception, there is also courage. Mountains of courage. Courage to keep going, to find a different way, and of course the courage to try in the first place. Here are some ways to nurture your child's bravery:

1. Show your Child what Bravery/Courage looks like. If you want your child to be brave, then you have to be brave. Be the hero.

2. Challenge and Praise. We naturally want to protect our kids. However, we also must challenge them constantly to try new things and to do things that they might fear. Build on their courageous attempts.

3. Build Confidence and Conviction. Build and nourish confidence within your child. Help them know their core identity is not their performance, what others say about them, or the sum of their possessions.

4. Speak of their Bravery as though it is all ready there. Kids step up to expectations or down to them. Speak to the courage that is coming to life inside them. Trust me – you are one of the bravest people I know.

5. Give Permission for Imperfection. Failure and rejection are often a sign that you've done something brave. Every experience gives new information and new wisdom that wouldn't have been there before. It's why only the brave ones get there in the end – they have the knowledge, wisdom and experience that can often only be found when you land badly – sometimes more than once. Give them space for imperfection – it's a growth staple.

6. Give them space for Courage of thought. Courage isn't only about pushing against your child's own edges. Sometimes it's about pushing against the friends who might steer them off track, the limiting expectations of others. There is nothing wrong with questioning – it opens hearts, minds and mouths – what's important is that the questioning is done respectfully.

7. Self-Talk. Self-Talk is one of the biggest ways we stop ourselves from venturing outside of our limits. Self-Talk can be automatic and barely noticeable, but can be limiting. These limits are the can't's, shouldn't, and what-ifs. However, brave can be a thought, a feeling, or an action. Your kiddos can always be braver than they think. They can do brave even if they don't think it or feel it. Brave is brave, however much fear and self-doubt is behind it.

8. Courage is about doing what's right. Sometimes courage is about doing the scary thing, and sometimes it's about doing the right thing. Saying "no" to something that doesn't feel right is one of the bravest things we humans can do.

9. Role Play. Get Creative. Come up with different scenarios involving potential acts of bravery and courage.

The bottom line is that children might believe that courage comes in the way of grand, big gestures, superheroic feats, or actions of dragon slayers. The truth is, our children are slaying their own dragons, every day. They're heroes, every one of them.

The key is helping them realize it so they can use it to push through their edges when they feel small, scared, confused, or unseen. Because one of the most important parts of being brave, is knowing that somewhere inside of you, 'brave' will be there when you need it, whether you feel it or not.
